April 29th, 2020 - Dion Boucicault's The Octoroon first presented in New York in 1859 bears more than a striking resemblance to its better known stage sister George Aiken's adaptation of Harriet Beecher Stowe's Uncle Tom's Cabin which premiered in 1852 both plays in their attempts to create sympathy for slaves while also depicting actual black people as minstrels have been called both 'abolitionist'

'The National Theatre's An Octoroon is a challenging take

May 19th, 2020 - An Octoroon is an exhausting play it requires its three male actors to play three parts each switching between them at breakneck speed sometimes within the same scene for the audience it's a full scale assault on the senses perhaps that shouldn't be a surprise the director Ned Bennett's previous play Buggy Baby at the tiny trendy Yard Theatre in Hackney earlier this year'
