'about natural experiments natural experiments in

May 7th, 2020 - natural experiments are characterized by the presence of a naturally occurring event e.g. new law, natural disaster, economic crisis that intervenes in an environment e.g. during 2008 and assigns subjects e.g. people, companies into a treatment group and a control group. Researchers can then compare the treatment group with the control group with regard to an outcome variable.'

'the definition of natural experiment in economics

June 5th, 2020 - natural experiments are used when such controlled experimentation would be too difficult, expensive, or unethical, as is the case with many human experiments. Opportunities for natural experimentation are of the utmost importance to subjects like epidemiology or the study of health and disease conditions in defined populations in which experimental study would be problematic to say the least.
